New London Neighbors

by Neighborhood Correspondent Dianne Chadwick nlneighbor@gmail.com

I've been a little unorganized the past few weeks and not stringing together two words for a column in a timely fashion. At the moment I have to get to a dog grooming appointment that I'm somewhat afraid of, so I only have a minute.

Why am I afraid? Because I fear the dogs will come back fully shaved. And it's no one's fault but my own. They had to skip a grooming appointment, so they are very Muppet-like in their doodleness. It's completely adorable, but it makes for very challenging brushing. Alas, they have some thick curls and likely some mats that I have been unable to keep up with.

Perhaps I'll include a before and after photo next week if they aren't feeling too ashamed. It's happened before and they come home humbled and looking like they feel somewhat broken on the inside. It's quite the canine drama. Thankfully, though, doggie hair grows back, and they are cute no matter what. Wish me luck.

Meetings

Thursday, Jan. 26, 6 p.m. and Tuesday, Jan. 31, 4 p.m., land purchase informational selectmen meetings, Kearsarge Professional Development Center, 165 Main St.

CFA First Fridays

A new and unique exhibition of photographs and paintings by local visual artists will open to the public at Bar Harbor Bank and Trust on Main Street on Friday, Feb. 3, 5-7 p.m. As part of the Center for the Arts' First Friday Gallery Stroll, this special exhibit is called "Where Painterly Art and Photography Converge." The exhibit will feature paintings created by members of the CFA's Art Café based on photographic works supplied by members of the Photography Café as part of a creative collaboration between the two groups.

The gallery stroll opening receptions will also take place at four other New London Galleries including The New London Inn featuring work by Kim Schusler, New London Barn Playhouse Fleming Center featuring the work of Peter Anderson, Tatewell Gallery featuring Grace Scarlet, and earlier in the day at Blue Loon Bakery featuring the work of Susan D'Appolino.
